A STRANGE LAKE.

The Pseuliavities of a Body of Water

In Anatralia.

Lake George is situated about four miles from the railway station at Bungendore, Australia, and has for many years engaged the attention of selentific men by reason of the singular and thexplicable phenomena connected with it. The estimates of its size vary considerably according to circumstances, but when moderately full about 20 by 7 miles will be found tolerably correct.

At either end the hand is fully 100 feet above the highest recorded surface of the lake, which possesses no known outlet, although it is fed by numerous

The lake was discovered by a bushman in 1820 and was known to the blacks as the "big water." It was then supposed to form the source of a river but subsequent visitors were much perplexed at the manner in which the blacks avoided the lake, of which they appeared to entertain a superstitious dread, one aged aboriginal stating she had seen it all covered with trees, another explaining that the whole of the water sunk through the bottom and disappeared, while others remembered the lake only as a series of small
